

“Keys to a Successful Restorative Nursing Program”

Sponsored

June 27, 2024 – Birmingham, Alabama

Restorative nursing programs affect a resident’s quality of life, facility survey outcomes, reimbursement, and resident/family facility choice. These programs are vital to your facility’s overall success, your residents’ ability to thrive and maintain dignity, and a facility staff’s job satisfaction.

Several Quality Measures will affect and can be impacted by restorative nursing programs. These measures include:

- Percentage of long stay residents who need increased help with ADLs
- Percentage of long stay residents whose ability to walk independently worsened
- Percentage of long stay resident experiencing falls
- Percentage of long stay residents experiencing one or more falls with major injury
- Percentage of long stay low risk residents who lose control of their bowels or bladder
- Percentage of long stay residents who have a catheter inserted and left in the bladder
- Percentage of short stay residents who meet or exceed discharge function score

For restorative nursing programs to be effective and profitable, attention to - and support for - restorative nursing must come from the top. The administrator, director of nurses, and therapy director must be on board. A facility-wide culture of restorative nursing must be present. Act now and get everyone on board with this comprehensive educational program, and ensure your facility is offering resident centered restorative nursing programs to improve, maintain, or slow decline in resident function in a positive culture environment.
